

Wisdom: Achieves complete harmony with minimum effort. *
Quantitative tools will underlie the realization.

I suggest that there's no evidence that qualitative approaches will constructively solve our national problems. The task is beyond the unaided human mind.

Wisdom is the mastery of aided constructive quantitative decision making.

Wise people do not intentionally waste other people's time and/or money and/or attention. The challenge of finding constructive, efficient solutions to unsolved problems is so engrossing that spending time deceiving anyone is an unconscionable waste of brain space.

Hence: 1) Nurture constructive competences.

"Inexperienced leadership" is an oxymoron.

2) Master constructive quantitative predictability.

Include accounting oversight of government spending.

3) Include redundancies as necessary for resilience.

4) Meet human needs via commodities.

5) Create a commonly-known, uniformly-enforced set of rule.

6) Create the world's first instructive vocabulary of social word definitions.

7) Return to separation of Church & State.

----- Other thoughts: -----

The foundation of misrepresentations is ignorance(s) & selfish agendas.

In the 1900's the countries of Central America were referred to as "Banana Republics"; billionaires endlessly created chaos there for personal advantage. Now the USA's governance is being played in the same way.

For 50 years the USA was the victim of a persistent "war against competence" which the billionaires have now won. Getting the Supreme Court to 6/9 sell-outs reveals an American ethical awareness overwhelmed by fathomless billionaire greed. & By design, we're stuck just-shy of enough votes to restore sanity. The USA is living the Banana Republic nightmare in broad daylight on the international stage.

People who can be destroyed by public revelation of their past indiscretions are easily extorted into far worse than worthless decision makers.

*A simple example:

Solving a Rubik's cube in the absolute minimum number of moves.
